

Want to start your own business?

Become a personal historian!

Whether you've had enough of working that nine-to-five office job, or you have a young family and would like to work from home, the opportunity to run your own business is more realistic nowadays thanks to the internet.

Starting a business from the ground up can be a daunting prospect, which is why many New Zealanders choose to work with a reputable business from home.

Christine Norton from Forget-Me-Not Life Stories says that thanks to a strong business model and huge interest from potential customers, the company is looking for writing partners who wish to establish their own business.

With six writing partners already as part of the team, Christine says the business is already very popular among those who want to write their life story and have it displayed in a professional and attractive manner for future generations to enjoy.

Forget-Me-Not Life Stories assists families in publishing an account of their family story or remembering someone special in their lives; with beautifully designed books which can be updated, if needed, in the future. The sister-business (Norton Company Histories) also allows business owners to commemorate their organisation's unique story or celebrate an employee's contribution to the business in a keepsake book.

According to Christine, there are three powerful points that underpin the success of the company's writing partners. These include the excellent training that they receive from the beginning, the mentoring and support they get at every turn and the comprehensive business pack which includes digital recording and transcription equipment, tool-kits, book samples, business cards, brochures, training videos etc and the writing partner's very own editing, design and production team which will assist in developing each book to the high level that customers have come to expect from the business.

"On completion of our specialised training programme, our successful writing partners become part of the team and are ready to 'hit the ground running, that is what makes this business opportunity so different. We all work together as a cohesive unit." says Christine.

To find out more about becoming a part of a like-minded team of personal historians with a love of family histories contact Christine.

Gordon & Rosemary with their completed book

Meet the writing partners:

Samantha Cutler

"As a newcomer to Forget-Me-Not Life Stories in 2017, I am delighted to be working with a tried, tested and successful business model. The support is exceptional and I am getting fantastic results already!"

Kate McCarthy

"I feel that it is important to capture the experiences and challenges faced by the older generation in order to provide context and meaning for future generations. Within this process the seniors come to understand that the contributions they made during their lives have true worth.

The business model offered by Christine is not only supportive and constructive, but most importantly, it works and gives a beginner confidence to fully develop professionally."

Contact Forget Me Not Life Stories

 07 548 0385

 cgorton@lifestories.net.nz

 www.forget-me-notlifestories.co.nz

 www.companyhistories.co.nz